

Giulia Fanti

Classical Civilization (CASP)

Giulia is currently a final year PhD student in Classics at the University of Cambridge, and member of Corpus Christi College. She is working on a thesis in Latin literature, and has been studying Greek and Latin for more than fourteen years. After attending a grammar school, she first obtained a Bachelor degree and then a Master degree cum laude in Classics from the University of Pavia (IT). She taught Classical Civilizations for CASP during the summers 2014 and 2015, and she has been teaching Latin and Greek Language to Undergraduate Students in the Faculty of Classics (Cambridge), as well as supervising for 1A and 1B Cambridge students. She has a remarkable international experience, thanks to the attendance of several summer schools in the UK and one year in Heidelberg (DE) within the Erasmus program.

She has a lively interest for all the aspects related with Classical Antiquity, in particular for literature, which she regards as the starting point to delve into Classical civilizations. She is deeply concerned with the increase of awareness of the Classical world, as she is firmly persuaded of its importance in understanding our current way of being and thinking. Beside her research, Giulia loves reading novels, foreign cultures and languages (in addition to Italian and English, she can speak German and French), travelling, playing tennis and cooking.
